The 1987 edition of the Concordia Women's Basketball Classic features two National finalists from last year's CIAU Basketball Championships. Laurentian, who were the 1986-87 Ontario Conference Champions, finished second in the nationals last year and are expected to repeat as national finalists this year. U.P.E.I. were Atlantic Conference champions in 86-87 and finished a strong sixth in last year's National finals.

This year's tournament features a mix of old and new women's basketball stars. The host Concordia Stingers are led by 5'6" dynamo point guard, Carol Assalian. Assalian was the 1986-87 QUAA Rookie of the Year and is a former college All-Canadian. Just recently, this outstanding student athlete was a recipient of a Government of Quebec Athletic Scholarship.

McGill looks to 5'10" forward Helene Cowan to take charge this weekend. Cowan is a former CIAU All-Canadian and is completing her final year of eligibility. Both Cowan and Concordia's Carol Assalian were selected tournament all-stars at the 1987 Carleton Invitational held November 6-8.

National finalist Laurentian has 1987 CIAU Coach of the Year, Peter Ennis, to guide them to the coveted Classic Championship. Laurentian is considered the tournament favourite. 5'8" point guard Sandy Stevenson plays a major role with the team. Stevenson is a former All-Canadian and competed with the Canadian National team this past Summer.

The Montreal Senior A Team will compete in this year's tournament for the first time. However, they will provide stiff competition because of their star-studded lineup. Former Olympic star and current CBC reporter Sylvia Sweeney is well known in Montreal and throughout Canada for her contributions to women's basketball. Former All-Canadian Jane Adolphe, from the University of Calgary, will also compete for the Montreal Senior A team. Adolphe will give the opposition a shooting clinic if given the chance.
